Robin Williams

Robin Williams is one of the most famous American comic actors and almost all the characters he has played had a great sense of humour especially an ability to come up with funny one-line jokes. He was born in Chicago and he moved around the USA quite a lot when he was young because his father took jobs in several different cities. He says that the frequent experience of being a new boy at school supported him to develop his sense of humour. He used to make jokes to make sure he would be popular with his classmates. After high school he trained to become a serious actor, but it was his comedy that brought him success, first as a solo comedian in California, then in the role of friendly alien Mork in the sitcom Mork and Mindy. After Mork and Mindy he started acting for Hollywood. After a few films that weren't very successful, he had a big hit with Good Morning Vietnam in which he played a foolish and amusing DJ on a radio station for American soldiers during the Vietnam War. His next successful film was Dead Poets' Society – he played the role of Mr Keating, an unusual English teacher working at a very strict private school for boys in late 1950s. This film was full of inspiring but also tragic results. In 1997 he won an Oscar for his role in Good Will Hunting, playing a Boston psychologist who helps an extremely intelligent but angry young man to think differently about his life. Williams is a big fan of cycling and unusually for an American, he enjoys watching rugby. He is married and lives in San Francisco.
